Lon Kreusler, an archaeologist, is contracted by Farrel, an advocate for indigenous rights, to investigate a fossilised human jawbone found accidentally on the shore of a vast salt lake located in South Australia's north. Taking leave of Eve, a girlfriend visiting with him, Lon sets about the one thousand kilometre drive from Adelaide to the lake via Coober Pedy. At the historic town of Gawler he meets hitchhikers, Rinzen and Lian. With the Chinese women as passengers Lon assists Diana, an astrologer with a car problem. After leaving the three women at Clare, in South Australia's mid-north, Lon meets Pete, an eccentric motorcyclist, near Port Augusta. With Lira, legal advisor to the Arabana Aboriginal Corporation, Lon drives to Halligan Bay on the salt lake's western shore. Together they discover the site of the jaw fossil lies adjacent to the entrance of a shaft suspected of being the long ago landing site of an alien spacecraft. Lon is contracted to oversee an international project to excavate the shaft. Lon meets Samantha, liaison for the project, and her unusual five year old son, Kyle. As the excavation gets under way Lon is joined by his old friend, Nick, a surveyor, who has previously assisted him with archaeological work. The story unfolds with characters intertwining. Diana introduces Lon to her brother, Simon, a retired engineer with an interest in robotics, and her partner, Silas, a former computer scientist turned ecologist. Involved peripherally in this tale are Lira's son, Conrad, Eve's daughter, Bianca, and Lon's daughter, Hannah, an artist who shares a unit with Bianca. Lon eventually meets Pete's son, Benjamin, who makes clear to Lon how the lives of the characters in the story overlap.
