Levant Mirage exposes more than just the results of fifteen hundred years of religious turmoil. The world faces a grim choice—submit to the demands of terrorists or face mass obliteration. Adam Michaels, son of a jet-setting mother and a heroic Syrian father is exonerated for his part in the bloodiest day of America's longest war. Yet when he returns home, neither forgiveness nor understanding greet him. His ambitious and politically connected wife files for divorce, a conspiracy in the halls of the Pentagon places a target squarely on his back, and a Broadway actress believes she has fallen in love with him.

When a top secret PhD dissertation is inexplicably declassified, Adam becomes the most hated man in the terrorist's world. Believing he alone might hold the key to thwart a theocratic society of subjugation, a splinter group of ISIS attempts to kidnap or at the very least, kill him.

With a billion lives in the balance as the planet crumbles, Adam makes a choice that few understand and fewer will forgive. Nations collapse under the weight of suspicion. Economies face ruin and a clock threatening to reset by a thousand years. Whole communities close their doors and America is faced with fighting wars on multiple fronts. Isolated and targeted, the country must find the guts and the people willing to sacrifice everything.
